DETAILED ACTION

Continued Examination Under 37 CFR 1.114

1. A request for continued examination under 37 CFR 1.114, including the fee set forth in 37 CFR 1.17(e), was filed in this application after final rejection. Since this application is eligible for continued examination under 37 CFR 1.114, and the fee set forth in 37 CFR 1.17(e) has been timely paid, the finality of the previous Office action has been withdrawn pursuant to 37 CFR 1.114. Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

- 6. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:
 - (a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.
- 7. Claims 1-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Walker et al. (US 5,926,796), in view of Watanabe et al. (US 5,543,607).

Walker et al. disclose a method of completing a plurality of transactions on a computer network involving at least one customer computer and a plurality of merchant computers, said method comprising the following steps:

transmitting an offer (to buy a single issue of a magazine for a particular price) from a first merchant computer 122 to a customer 110 computer 120 (the computer provided to interface with the customer 110 and process the customer's 110 transactions);

transmitting customer-inputted information (name and method of payment) from the customer computer 120 to the first merchant computer 122 in response to the offer;

utilizing the customer-inputted information to process 1335 the offer, wherein said customer-inputted information contains a payment method (method of payment) and customer identification data (customer name) required by said first merchant to process said offer; transmitting 1325 to said customer computer 120 a second offer from a second merchant computer 130 (an offer to buy a subscription to the magazine, it being considered inherent that the subscription offers are provided from the magazine publishers to the retailer to sell); and, transmitting said customer-inputted information from said first merchant computer 122 to said second merchant computer 130, provided said customer computer 120 accepts said second offer, but the customer computer of Walker is operated by a store clerk rather than directly operated by the customer, the customer information being inputted by the customer to the store clerk who then actually keys in the data into the customer computer.

However, Watanabe et al. show a similar customer computer to the customer computer of Walker et al., except that the customer computer of Watanabe et al. is indeed operated directly by the customer, rather than by the store clerk.

Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art, at the time of the invention, to have modified the method of Walker et al. so as to have the customer computer operated directly by the customer rather than operated by a store clerk, in accordance with the teachings of Watanabe et al., in order to improve efficiency by employing fewer store clerks, thereby reducing operating costs and increasing profits.

Regarding claims 2, 4, 8, and 9, Walker et al. disclose that the step of transmitting an offer is further comprised of the following steps:

sending 370 an offer from said second merchant computer 130 to said first merchant computer 122;

storing 342 said offer on said first merchant computer 122 (see, in particular, Fig. 3); and, presenting said offer 1325 by said first merchant computer 122 to said customer computer 120 (see, in particular, Fig. 13).

Regarding claims 3 and 5, the method of Walker et al. further comprises the following steps: processing said customer-inputted information by said second merchant computer 130; and, causing a predetermined number of issues of a periodical to be delivered 1550 to a customer associated with said customer-inputted information (see, in particular, Figs. 14 and 15).

Regarding claim 6, the method of Walker et al. further comprises the step of automatically debiting a customer account (it being inherent that the publisher maintains an account for each customer containing the number of remaining issues owed to the customer) corresponding to said customer-inputted information after said predetermined number of issues have been delivered (debiting the account of issues-owed by one issue after each additional issue is delivered), provided said customer does not cancel future delivery of said periodical (see, in particular, column 12, lines 6-53).

Response to Arguments

- 8. Applicant's arguments filed September 26, 2003 and October 24, 2003 have been fully considered but are not persuasive.
- 9. The arguments regarding the previous prior art rejection have been considered, but have been rendered moot by applicant's amendments, and the consequent new grounds of rejection.
